What does the neonatal outreach nurse do?

A neonatal outreach nurse is a registered nurse with a special qualification for working with babies, who works within the community children's nursing team.

S/he will endeavour to enable your baby's safe discharge home as soon as possible and will support you at home. This can be an anxious time for the whole family. The neonatal outreach nurse will try to ensure that this transfer from ward to home is smooth and stress free and that you feel supported, happy and confident to care for your baby before and after you go home.

A neonatal outreach nurse works in partnership with you (the parent/carer), as well as other health care professionals to ensure that the health care needs of your baby are met. These professionals may be:

- Paediatric consultants
- GPs
- Nurse specialists
- Health visitors
- Community midwives
- Social workers
- Physiotherapists
- Dietitian
- Pharmacists
- Children's Centre

The neonatal outreach nurse provides support, guidance and education for families and their babies.

Which babies receive help from a neonatal outreach nurse?

Babies that meet the criteria for referral to the neonatal outreach nurse include infants

- born below 34 weeks gestation
- born below 1.5kg or weighing below 2kg at discharge
- requiring oxygen at home
- with additional needs as requested by the paediatrician
- who need blood tests

Where is the service provided?

Our aim is to provide a smooth transition from hospital to home. The neonatal outreach nurse will support you during the period leading up to discharge in hospital and in the early days at home.

Support will also be given over the telephone and the neonatal outreach nursing team, or community children's nursing team in their absent, can be contacted by telephone or mobile telephone (see below).

What does the neonatal outreach service provide?

The neonatal outreach nurse will visit you in your home or contact you by telephone during the first few days following your infants discharge from hospital.

The neonatal outreach nurse may visit you at home to observe and monitor your baby's progress, offer support and answer any questions you may have. This may include weighing your baby, taking blood samples if required and feeding support.

When your baby's condition does not require the added help of the neonatal outreach nurse or the community children's nursing team, we will discharge your baby to the health visitor for on-going care.
